How to Write an Argumentative Essay the Easy Way

The claim should come in the introduction. For example, if my claim is that shopping at Walmart is ruining America, then I need to set up my argument in the very first paragraph. Perhaps I could quote an interesting statistic or summarize a story I read in my research. I need to get my readers' attention right off the bat or I risk losing them. For this particular essay, I could say something like, "Did you know that Walmart is literally the world's largest company in the 21st century? (Dube, Lester, and Eidlin)."
I think that might get a reader's attention right away. After all, it's a pretty shocking statistic, even if people suspected it. Knowing it for certain could be surprising for many readers, and I want to get their attention right away.
