The purpose of system software is to subdivide the application programmer from the user, simplify details of the particular computer being used, including such accessories as communication devices, printers, device cables, floppy's and keyboards, and also to partition the computer's resources such as memory and processor time to a user and enable sharing.

Programming software:

Engineering software, usually provided ready to assist programmer in writing computer programs, and software using different programming languages in a more convenient way. The tools include:

- compilers
- debuggers
- linkers
- editors
- test editors

An Integrated development environment (IDE) is a single application that attempts to manage all these functions.

Application software:

Application software allows users to accomplish one or more specific (not directly computer development related) tasks. Typical applications include:

- industrial automation
- business software
- computer games
- scientific, laboratory and solid state physics software
- bioinformatics (i.e. the internet and everything that flows on it)
- databases
- educational software
- medical software
- nuclear software
- molecular modeling software
- image editing
- spreadsheets
- Word processing
- Decision making software
