0242 In 2002 Frank Gehry won the competition to design a new concert hall in downtown Los Angeles who would better fit the needs of the local opera (Philharmonic) Orchestra – a venue that had been designed by Charles Franklin Keeler in the 1920s. Gehry's architecture took on a new form in the 1970s when he built the Disney Hall. Gehry's architecture sought to merge the traditional needs of a concert hall with the needs of the 21st century and architecture, a modern concert space, and a new building. The lobby and main stage are all in the same level. The building's design is based on the same model: Gehry's design for the Walt Disney Concert Hall in Los Angeles is a model of modern architecture.
